

Increasing the saturated output RF power for RF amplifiers using a passive technique

This paper presents a design and an implementation of a special technique to increase the saturated output RF power of semiconductor RF amplifiers using passive technique. This approach allows using cheap, small size and low power semiconductor RF amplifiers in the circuitry instead of a single high power traveling wave tube TWT. Also it will help us to overcome the heat problems since this method depends on passive components.